

"The Saddest Book in My Library..." "The Saddest Book in My Library..."

Many of us have read biographies of missionary Adoniram Judson, a contemporary of William Carey, who served sacrificially in Burma and India, burying two wives and several children on the mission field. A devoted servant of God, committed to spreading the Gospel, he sadly and unintentionally lost one of his surviving children as well. Homeschooling father, Glenn Conjurske, writes of: "...the saddest book in my library. It is Why She Became a Spiritualist, by Abigail A. Judson, Daughter of Adoniram Judson, Missionary to the Burmese Empire. The book was published in 1891.

I have the third edition (1895) published by Abby herself. The book belittles and repudiates everything Christian (including the Deity of Christ, His miracles, the blood atonement, and even the personality and masculinity of God), while it exalts ancient Egyptian religion, the pure and self-denying Buddha,' Thomas Paine's 'magnificent... "Age of Reason",' and, in short, everything anti-Christian. Our souls echo the title, and cry out, 'Why?' "That question we cannot answer, but this much we know: at the age of ten, Abby was left in America to be educated by others, while her father returned to Burmah. As a result of her secular education, she became much enamored with great, but ungodly men, and could not bear the thought of their being in hell. Thus was her heart turned away from the God of the Bible.

"What makes the whole matter the more painful is that Judson's third wife, Emily, had very narrowly escaped from the same snare herself, and doubtless might have kept the dear girl from it. Emily actually pled with Judson to entrust his dear Abby to her, and take her back to Burmah with them. But her pleadings did not prevail, and the girl was left in America."

-- "Olde Paths and Ancient Landmarks"
627-1 Coon St.,
Rhineland, WI 54501

Many of us have read biographies of missionary Adoniram Judson, a contemporary of William Carey, who served sacrificially in Burma and India, burying two wives and several children on the mission field. A devoted servant of God, committed to spreading the Gospel, he sadly and unintentionally lost one of his surviving children as well. Homeschooling father, Glenn Conjurske, writes of: "...the saddest book in my library. It is Why She Became a Spiritualist, by Abigail A. Judson, Daughter of Adoniram Judson, Missionary to the Burmese Empire. The book was published in 1891.

I have the third edition (1895) published by Abby herself. The book belittles and repudiates everything Christian (including the Deity of Christ, His miracles, the blood atonement, and even the personality and masculinity of God), while it exalts ancient Egyptian religion, the pure and self-denying Buddha,' Thomas Paine's 'magnificent... "Age of Reason",' and, in short, everything anti-Christian. Our souls echo the title, and cry out, 'Why?' "That question we cannot answer, but this much we know: at the age of ten, Abby was left in America to be educated by others, while her father returned to Burmah. As a result of her secular education, she became much enamored with great, but ungodly men, and could not bear the thought of their being in hell. Thus was her heart turned away from the God of the Bible.

"What makes the whole matter the more painful is that Judson's third wife, Emily, had very narrowly escaped from the same snare herself, and doubtless might have kept the dear girl from it. Emily actually pled with Judson to entrust his dear Abby to her, and take her back to Burmah with them. But her pleadings did not prevail, and the girl was left in America."

-- "Olde Paths and Ancient Landmarks"
627-1 Coon St.,
Rhineland, WI 54501